PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

The Global Growth Portfolio returned 1.1% in June, taking 2026 YTD returns to 8.6%.

Markets demonstrated resilience over June, largely defying geopolitical tensions and fiscal concerns. The supply shock stemming from the conflict in the Middle East continued to boost inflation expectations, leading to a renewed bias towards raising policy rates across most central banks. The S&P 500 hovered near all-time highs, supported by robust AI revenues and strong technology earnings. Keir Starmer resigned as Prime Minister of the UK, with his replacement likely to be Andy Burnham in an uncontested race. Markets continue to monitor closely whether the next leadership team will maintain fiscal discipline.

Global equities posted mixed returns over June, as market performance remained highly concentrated, with top companies in Information Technology and Communication Services driving the bulk of the gains. AI-linked semiconductors and Asian technology supply chains propelled US, Taiwanese, and Korean equities higher, as demand continued to rise for data centre capacity. However, the Magnificent Seven stocks fell c.10% over the month, as investors questioned whether rising capital expenditure would translate into sufficient profits to justify their substantial share price gains. Bond markets exhibited caution amid persistent inflation and elevated energy prices. Gold came under selling pressure, falling by over 10%. Brent crude fluctuated on geopolitical headlines but trended softer overall, ending close to pre-conflict levels. The dollar trended upwards, driven by a hawkish pivot from the Fed and safe-haven flows linked to geopolitical tensions in the Middle East.
