INVESTMENT PHILOSOPHY

PERFORMANCE DISCLOSURE

Simulated past performance and past performance is not a guide to future performance. The value of investments can fall. Investors may not get back the amount invested. Income from investments may vary and is not guaranteed. The return may increase or decrease due to currency fluctuations. Performance figures are net of fees and charges. The Fund may hold a relatively small number of stocks as compared to many other funds. This may make the Fund's performance more volatile than would be the case if it had a more diversified investment portfolio. For a full list of risks applicable to this fund, please refer to the Prospectus.

FUND COMMENTARY

The market volatility that started in February continues unabatedly into the current strong US reporting season. Almost three quarters of the S&P 500 companies have reported, with their weighted average bottom-line earnings growing at +23% and the top-line revenue growth at +9%. Whilst earnings have been boosted by the new tax regime, the level of top-line growth should especially please shareholders.

The US economic fundamentals and general business outlook indicators remain constructive, with most of the important indicators in this context at elevated levels. They leave ample room for retracement without causing too much investor alarm for imminent structural peaks in share prices.

The main reasons for the continuing volatility can still be ascribed to fears of possible rapidly rising inflation and therefore rapidly rising interest rates. This school of thought gets support from the rising oil price and low unemployment numbers (with corresponding fears for escalating wage increases). Against this, the Federal Reserve indicates that inflation is behaving as they expected it to and breakeven rates (reflecting general future inflation expectations) are rising only moderately. We do not yet detect particular strains in other relevant financial market indicators in this context.

The first quarter 2018 US economic growth of +2.3% has brought the four-quarter running average to +2.9%, above the 25-year average of +2.5%. Some may perceive the US economy to now be growing above trend, with risk of becoming overheated and with corresponding risks of escalating inflation. We would guard against this stance, on the basis that the +2.9% growth is based off a very low +1.2% growth in the first quarter of last year. Further to this, considering the ten US economic cycles since 1948 on a peak-to-peak basis, and despite the extended length of the current cycle, its level of recovery is not yet even three quarters of the average level of recovery of these ten cycles. We, therefore, do not yet see material risk of a sudden overheating US economy.
